Veeraswamy – the UK's oldest surviving Indian restaurant – has just reopened following a complete overhaul. More than £1.5m has been spent on the interiors, which are stunning: beautiful coloured lights, eye-catching paintings, gorgeous wooden tables &, among other attention-grabbing details, a large collection of royal turbans. Against such a backdrop, the food has a tough job to take centre stage, but it achieves this with bells on. From the moment the first dish lands on the table, you know you're in for a top-notch dining experience. This being a member of the Masala World group (which also includes Chutney Mary & Amaya), things have been done properly & the entire kitchen brigade has been on a lengthy tour of India to root out new, delicious dishes. Moreish herb leaves coated in batter & deep-fried; soft & juicy oysters flash grilled & served with a feisty salsa; layered, buttery naan bread; slow-cooked, meltingly tender lamb cooked Lucknow-style; chicken breast rolled with pine nuts, lemon & rose petals – we'd recommend it all. Indeed, we have no hesitation awarding this our top rating of two stars.
